

Dermacase

Can you identify this condition?

Jeng-Feng Chen MD Chien-Ping Chiang MD

A 29-year-old man presented with abrupt onset of generalized painful, burning skin eruptions that occurred 6 hours after taking ibuprofen for his sore throat. The physical examination revealed numerous discrete, variably sized, well-demarcated, round-to-oval, dusky red patches with a few overlying blisters and erosions on his trunk, proximal extremities, lip, and foreskin. He reported having a similar skin rash several years ago after he took over-the-counter cold medication. His family history was unremarkable.

The most likely diagnosis is

1. Stevens-Johnson syndrome
2. Erythema multiforme
3. Urticaria
4. Pemphigus vulgaris
5. Generalized fixed drug eruption

Answer on page 660